To the English Reader.

Whenever a new publication is offered to the publick, the author should have it in his power to point out the use and necessity of increasng, by his performance, that immense literary store, which, however it may forward the professedly learned in their researches, seems likely enough to puzzle the student, who treads the mazes of science without a clue to conduct him. Indeed, since the revival of letters in Europe and the invention of the art of printing, the number of printed books has increased in such a rapid proportion, as to baffle the efforts of the most assiduous collectors and bibliographers, who have attempted, either to accumulate general libraries, or to compile what may be termed an history of universal literature. It is a well known fact among the lovers of bibliographical knowledge, that many an eminent litterator, after having spent his life in the tedious occupation of collecting the titles of books, has left his successors in that branch of science to lament the unfinished state of his labours. And, when it is considered, that the annual harvest of new publications in Germany alone, upon an average amounts to near three thousand works, we shall not surely overrate the literary produce of all Europe, by fixing it at ten thousand volumes in the course of every year. Agreeably to this computation, a single century bids fair to be productive of a million of books and Leibnitz seems not to have conjectured amiss, when he facetiously maintained the increase of literature to be such, that future generations would find whole cities insufficient to contain their libraries. It was undoubtedly from the same comprehensive view of this great object, that one of the first philosophick characters in England (the present illustrious President of the Royal Society) has been heard to urge the necessity of rejecting hence forward the idea of general collections of book in the capital and recommending in its place, as the proper object of private collectors, to confine their libraries to one individual branch of human knowledge, by which means a great number of particular collections, each compleat in its kind, would quickly be brought forward and the purposes of instruction be more easily attained, than whilst the rage of indiscriminate collection subsisted and the number of competitors for the same book precluded the possibility of completion.

The same difficulty, which attends the methodical arrangement and compleat enumeration of all the books now extant in print, will likewise apply to that part of literature, by which we are taught to consider the authors themselves exerting their talents, under various points of view, either, as they happened to be contemporaries, or according to the different ages and countries in which they flourished, or with a view to the distinct branches of knowledge, which they cultivated and the proportion, in which they contributed to the common stock of improvement. To the works, which have appeared upon this subject, inconsiderable as their number and defective as their contents may have been, we are indebted for some general ideas concerning the comparative quantity of literary exertion, which different nations have shewn within certain periods of time, the sciences which they have cultivated in preference to others and the differences and singularities of national taste.

Germany has hitherto been most successful in the laborious endeavours to illustrate the history of its own litterati. The indefatigable application of Hamberger and of his successor Meusel has furnished a catalogue of the authors now living in that country, in which their names and works are collected with surprizing accuracy. Their example has encouraged a number of assiduous bibliographers to illustrate the literary history of their several provinces. In other countries this useful and necessary branch of compilation has been too much neglected. La France litteraire, that meagre and defective performance, has not been continued since the Year 1784. The list of Spanish authors during the reign of Carlos III., by Juan Sempere y Guarinos, only extends to writers of some eminence, whilst Italy and all the Northern countries have not so much as attempted any thing of the kind.

Ayscough's index to the seventy volumes of the Monthly Review, though a work of great merit, was not however calculated to supply this deficiency with regard to English litterature, as its plan excluded all the books which had not been reviewed in those volumes. As to the catalogue of five hundred celebrated authors of Great-Britain now living, (London 1788. 8^{vo}) it does not require great penetration to observe that those names only have been selected from the bulk of English writers, on whom the anonymous critick has thought proper to pass either censure or commendation. When these circumstances are impartially weighed, the propriety of the present publication may perhaps be the more easily admitted. Indeed the prevailing taste for English books in Germany seemed more particularly to demand an enumeration, which has not hitherto been attempted in England.

The author has confined himself intirely to the most recent literary productions of Great-Britain, Ireland and the United states of America. A period of twenty years, from 1770 to 1790 seemed to him to be most adequate to the term of modern litterature. He has subjoined to the names of the living authors the titles of their works together with their prices, always taking care to notice the german translation, where it was known to exist. Translations into other languages as well as biographical notes concerning the authors themselves, would have swelled, what was intended for a compendious essay, to the extent of several volumes. For the same reason, though the names of authors deceased within these last twenty years have been inserted, yet it has not been thought proper to recount their publications. In this part of his performance however, the author has met with the greatest difficulty and thinks it very probable, from the imperfection of the intelligence which he has been able to procure, that he may have placed several persons among the living, who have already paid the debt of nature. English books, written by foreigners, will naturally find a place in the literary catalogues of these nations, to whom they respectively belong, and are of course omitted here; but anonymous works have generally been referred to their proper per authors and inserted in the present collection with an asterisk (*) prefixed to them.

In an undertaking of this arduous nature, it is next to impossible, to avoid mistakes and omissions. These can only be corrected or supplied by the candid communications of the reader and will be received with grateful acknowledgment by the author, who takes this opportunity of returning his sincere thanks to several friends, from whom he has experienced the most valuable assistance. The author's situation having furnished him with all the printed subsidies relative to his undertaking, it will perhaps apologize for the seeming presumption of a foreigner in venturing to furnish his own countrymen with a list of British authors.

But the writer of this preface fears to have trespassed upon the indulgence of his readers, having lost the habit of writing in a language which was once familiar to him, he is aware that the eagerness to obey the summons of a friend, may prove a very unsatisfis-tisfactory excuse for thus attempting to give the publick some account of the motives and the plan of the present publication.
